Recent weather has hit hard.

If you're dealing with erosion on your farm, poplars and willows can help stabilise your land and protect your investment.

In the right place, these trees are great for stabilising:

- River and stream banks
- Hillside and Gully erosion

They're fast-growing, tough, and proven to hold soil together where it counts.

Stock is limited, so we're asking farmers to register their interest. This helps us understand where the trees are needed most, how many are needed, and addition support required both now and longer term.

The harvest and planting season is upon us and stock will be available in late August — so time is short.
